To write a review of the article in APA format, start by formatting the article's citation. Read through the article and identify standard APA sections, such as summaries, introductions, methods, research, and results. An APA article ends with a discussion section. Next, read and review the text, which shows if each section is covered by the appropriate content. Decide if the article presents content in a logical process. Take notes about what the purpose of the article is and whether the information presented is relevant. Include key indicators or goals and whether information is comparable to other studies of the same content. Make a list of key points from each section and keep in mind whether any graphs, images, or statistics presented are relevant effective or not. Record the strengths or weaknesses of the article, and whether the article achieves its goals. Study any references presented in the article to ensure they are presented or formatted correctly. Use your notes to complete a review document in accordance with the requirements set by In conclusion, discuss whether the article succeeds in promoting the field of research it is examining. If required, include a personal review of whether the article supports what the instructor teaches in class. In the citation, start with the first last and initials of the author. Follow this with the five authors publishing the article in parentheses, followed by a period outside the closing parenthesis. Write down the name of the article, with the name of the magazine following it in parentheses. Set the next volume number in parentheses and issue numbers in another set of parentheses. End the citation with the page number of the article. Be the first to discover secret destinations, travel hacks, and more. By continuing, you agree to our Privacy Policy and Terms of Use.
